

On Wavelength

A product brief for affiliates: what the app does, who it is for, and how it makes money.

What it is

On Wavelength is a focus and deep-work tracker for solo professionals who need to defend their attention. Pomodoro-style sessions with custom intervals, calendar integration, daily and weekly stats, and a clean editorial dashboard. Native iOS.

Who it is for

Indie hackers, freelance makers, knowledge workers, students, anyone with a productivity-curious feed. The audience overlaps heavily with the "productivity-tool of the month" segment on TikTok and Instagram. Creators who sit well: indie-hacker build-in-public accounts, freelancer YouTube channels, study-with-me reels, deep-work routine carousels.

Key features

- Focus sessions: pomodoro-style with custom intervals (25/5, 50/10, 90/20 or whatever your rhythm is), background hum optional.
- Daily and weekly stats: time spent in deep work, average session length, focus streaks.
- Calendar integration: blocked focus time appears in your calendar so meetings stay out.
- Quiet hours: notification mute schedule, app-level, no OS-level Do-Not-Disturb gymnastics.
- Productivity dashboard: editorial layout, designed to be screenshotted into a journal entry without looking like a "stats screen".
- Friends layer: optional small-group accountability without the social-network noise.

Why this works as an affiliate pitch

The productivity audience converts well on apps that look serious and stay out of the way. Wavelength sits in the same psychological category as Bear, Things or Roam: bought for ritual, not for features. Creators who already talk about deep work, time-blocking or anti-distraction routines have a near-native fit. Higher-priced subs (8 EUR vs. 4.99 EUR for our crafting apps) mean each conversion carries more per-month commission, which compounds across the 12-month window.
